In June 1896 I had some correspondence with the State Department concerning an application for a passport.
I stated that, while my father remained a citizen of France until his death, I had been born in the United States, had always resided here and had voted at the coming of age. The Department answered that I should make the application as a native citizen and that it would be granted.
